In Saskatchewan it is the law that children between the ages of 6 and 16 must attend school.

Education is funded through tax dollars. Every taxpayer in the province contributes to the education that children receive.

Both Public and Separate schools are publicly funded in Saskatchewan. There is no tuition fee for education in public or separate schools. There may be a small fee for school supplies or added resources.

Public schools provide education without religious affiliation. Separate schools provide education with religious instruction. In Saskatchewan, most separate schools provide Catholic education.

Education tax dollars are automatically directed to the local public school division. Residents who are Catholic must indicate that they would like their taxes directed to the Catholic school division (if one exists in their area).
